DIRECT TEA SUPPLY FROM THE MINCING LANE MARKET.

MINCING LANE, LONDON, is one of the most notable places in the World. England's vast Colonial possessions, and her supremacy on the seas, have made her the great centre for the reception of the produce of the Globe; and these productions, grown in all Countries, under various conditions of climate, by different races of people, are brought for disposal to the Commercial Sale Rooms, a huge pile of buildings situated in Mincing Lane, London. Tea from China, India, Ceylon, and Java; Sugar from the West Indies; Coffee from Arabia; Cotton and Tobacco from America; Spices from the far West; Cocoa from Trinidad; Dried Fruits from Lisbon and Bordeaux; Wines from the Continent, and innumerable other articles of consumption are sold there daily all the year round; and it is estimated that goods to the value of nearly £1,000,000 sterling change hands every day in this remarkable building, universally admitted to be the Produce Market of the whole World. It contains about 20 auction rooms, each capable of accommodating between 200 and 300 persons, and the goods offered for sale by the different auctioneers in surprisingly large quantities, are sold at such speed as would fairly astonish a casual observer.

Catalogues of portions of the various cargoes are circulated about a week previous to the day of sale, known members of each trade being in the interim allowed small samples for the purpose of valuation.

The illustration on next page is a reproduction in a reduced form of the front sheet of the "Public Ledger," the principal trade journal published daily in Mincing Lane, London; it will convey some idea of the magnitude of the business daily transacted there, and confirm the accuracy of the preceding remarks.

Surrounding the Commercial Sale Rooms are the offices of the Importers, Merchants,

The Public Ledger.

Brokers, and Wholesale Dealers of the City of London, who buy and sell amongst themselves these articles of produce in enormous quantities for cash, then resell them in reduced lots at considerable profit to retailers in town and country, who in their turn dispose of them in small quantities, at again greatly increased profits, to Consumers. Large amounts of capital are naturally required to carry out these operations, and as capital will always command position, Consumers have hitherto been compelled to tolerate this roundabout process; the result being that several inordinate profits are made by the intermediaries, or Middlemen, who stand between the Importer and Consumer, and as it were, suck the very life out of trade. These profits so enhance the costs that, as a matter of fact, prices, out of all reason, are being paid by the Consumer for articles of daily consumption, which, if tested, would in many instances show an astounding addition to first cost.

In confirmation of this statement, take for instance Tea, of which there is no article of daily food of more general consumption. It has been drunk in this country for the last 200 or 250 years, but only during the present century has it attained such universal favour.

The enormous quantity of about Two hundred and fifty million pounds weight of Tea are annually imported into London; of this, about ninety million pounds are grown in China, while in India some four hundred thousand acres of land are under tea cultivation, yielding about one hundred and twenty million pounds; the remainder of the import coming from Ceylon and Java.

The Tea bush is non-deciduous, and thrives best in light sandy loam, on valley land, where a running stream passes through the estate. It luxuriates in a warm, damp climate; the temperature cannot be too high if accompanied with abundant rainfall. In the early months of the year before the sap rises, the bushes are as carefully pruned and attended to as fruit and rose trees are in this country, in order to cause them to shoot and sprout vigorously, and by the middle of April the season commences for gathering the leaves, which gathering is continued at intervals until October.

The coolies and natives are most expert in this process of stripping the plants, and soon after collecting the leaves, roll and twist them with marvellous rapidity into the different forms and shapes in which they may be required. So soon as this is completed, the leaves, green and juicy, are compressed tightly into balls or clustered into heaps for fermentation; this is the most important time in the manufacture of Tea, extraordinary care being then required, as, if the green leaves be allowed to remain too long, or not long enough in this condition, they acquire a heated, sour flavour, which is afterwards ineradicable. A careful manager will never leave his Tea garden without special supervision while this process is going on, and so soon as he is satisfied that fermentation has commenced, loses no time in having the leaves carried to the interior of the curing-house, where all hands are called into requisition to quickly place them in pans over sharp charcoal fires, to dry and make them perfectly crisp; they are afterwards passed through various sized sieves for assortment, and the manufacture being complete, they are packed in chests and forwarded down country, (frequently some hundreds of miles) by railway or in wagons drawn by oxen, to the nearest seaport, whence they are consigned to the London Market in Mincing Lane.

As with ordinary vegetation, so with the Tea bush, the rule holds good, that the small young leaves on the tops of the twigs are the best and are the most aromatic and fragrant; they are called "Pekoe tips," and, gathered in early spring, then almost bursting with succulence, are covered with a white flowery bloom; if examined through an ordinary microscope they will be found to be soft and silky as velvet, and they form the delicious and delicately flavoured kinds which the public, through the ordinary channels, are practically unable to obtain.

The old leaves lower down the stems are coarse and tough, compared to the young shoots, and it is from them, and from a second crop of autumnal gathering, dry, stalky, and containing but little sap, much of it being absolutely worthless, that cheap, common Tea is manufactured.

These latter remarks apply principally to China Teas; in Indian and Ceylon growths, British interests have taken up the industry, the gardens have the utmost care bestowed upon them, and the Teas are made by machinery. Indian and Ceylon Teas have consequently attained the highest positions in the estimation of the British public.

The principal ports of shipment from China are Hong Kong, Canton, Shanghai and Foo Chow; and from India the one great centre of export is Calcutta. Several magnificent lines of screw Steamers are now engaged in the service, freighted with these huge cargoes of Tea, and by the shortened route through the Suez Canal are enabled to make the passage to London from China, a distance of about 11,000 miles, under six weeks.

Now it must be apparent to the reader, that the routine and many hands through which Tea has to pass after leaving the grower, and before reaching the table of the consumer, most prejudicially affect the finer kinds getting into consumption. The numerous profits made on the article, by the various persons—Middlemen—engaged in the trade, form such an incubus on the cost of the choice sorts, that the prices finally become so high as to render the Teas practically unsaleable. Thus, to meet the demand for Tea at reasonable quotations, common, inferior, and second crop growths are largely bought and forced upon consumers, at prices out of all proportion to their value.

The public are powerless in the matter, and it is an everyday complaint that "try where we may, we cannot get good Tea."

Why?

The answer is simple, and easy to find:

Because so many excessive profits are made on the article, by the Middlemen, before the consumer can obtain it.

To get choice Tea at a reasonable price, THE UNITED KINGDOM TEA COMPANY unhesitatingly assert that it must be BOUGHT FIRST HAND DIRECT FROM THE IMPORTERS on the London Market, in Mincing Lane, and SOLD FIRST HAND, DIRECT from the London Market, in Mincing Lane, to the Consumer, THUS AVOIDING ALL INTERMEDIATE PROFITS.

There is no other way.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer, on the 17th April, 1890, in his Budget Speech in the House of Commons, announcing the intention of the Government to reduce the Duty on Tea from 6d. a lb. to 4d. a lb., stated:—

"If Tea were sold, as it could be, at anything "like the cost price, it would appear at once what

" an enormous relief would be given by a reduction " of 2d. per pound. But the amount of relief is
" concealed by the fact that the MIDDLEMAN
" walks away with so large a proportion of the
" price which is paid for Tea."

The "Times" on the following day, April 18th, 1890, in a leading article on the subject of the Budget, remarked :—

" It is doubtful whether the reduction of 2d. per " pound in the Duty on Tea will confer much " practical benefit on the Consumer. The " Middleman, whose exactions the Chancellor
" of the Exchequer condemns, will probably
" manage to divert a good deal of the relief
" into his own well-filled pockets."

No higher authorities than these are needed to fully endorse the preceding remarks in this pamphlet, and to convince the public of the necessity of procuring their supplies of Tea FIRST HAND.

The Directors of THE UNITED KINGDOM TEA COMPANY, LIMITED, distinctly affirm that the Company's system of FIRST HAND TRADING enables Consumers to be absolutely independent of the Middleman. By dealing with THE UNITED KINGDOM TEA COMPANY, Teas of the very highest quality are obtained Direct from the Importers.

What "THE LANCET" says;—

"UNITED KINGDOM TEA COMPANY'S TEAS.—We have "examined and analysed these Teas at some length. Indian Teas, "it is well known, give rough, thick liquors, the Teas of China "are delightfully delicate in flavour and aroma, whilst the Teas "of Ceylon appear to occupy a position intermediate in character. "These qualities are combined by the United Kingdom Tea "Company by the JUDICIOUS and CAREFUL BLENDING "by Machinery in such proportions as to YIELD the BEST "RESULTS, and are, in fact, just what one would expect to "gain with GENUINE and CAREFULLY PREPARED "TEAS."
